More Chinese universities are opening their libraries to the public, allowing people to enjoy reading during normal time and the vacations.

But for some students, including Wang Ling, 21, in Sun Yat-sen University, this practice has caused headaches. "Members of the public come to our libraries more for sightseeing than reading," said Wang. "They sometimes even bring their kids along, and take photos as if it were a place of interest." Wang has found it hard to get a seat during busy times. Being short of space is a common problem for university libraries in China.

However, this is not the only reason why students dislike their libraries being open to members of the public. They fear that the quietness of the libraries will be influenced because of visitors' rude behavior.

Chen Jie, 18, a student in Tongji University, is one who would be against opening to the public. "I have been to a public library before. People were chatting loudly or speaking on cell phone so you can hardly read," Chen said. She notices teachers doing serious reading and feels their concentration has influenced her. "If too many strangers stay here, the whole library will be a noisy place and it's difficult for us to study quietly," she said.

Will there be alternative (可替代的) ways to share those libraries? Some experts consider that university libraries can prevent the public from entering certain areas. "We might keep magazines for academic research only for teachers and students," said Zhu Lina, library director in Jinan University.

Working together with the community library is another solution. "It's possible that a member of the public can order a book in our library over the Internet," Ge Jianxiong, the library director in Fudan University said. "We'll send it to a public library close to their home."

- () 4. We can see from the passage that Wang Ling _____.
A. hates to study in the library B. prefers sightseeing to reading
C. feels good to play with kids D. is a university student aged 21
- () 5. In Chen Jie's opinion, visitors to university libraries may_____.
A. break the peace there B. take up too much space
C. make teachers relaxed D. get students to read more
- () 6. The writer mentions two library directors' words to help explain how to_____.
A. manage libraries online B. share university libraries
C. keep the public polite D. do scientific research

If you are going to apply for a job, be prepared for the kinds of interviews you can expect. One type of interviews is the telephone interview. Here are some tips for telephone interviews: _____. Before the interview, guess and write down the questions you might be asked. Practice the answers orally until you are satisfied with yourself. The questions can be about your working experiences, skills and achievements.

Keep your notes handy. Have any key information next to the phone, including your notes about the company and the questions you have prepared for. Then you can easily get the information you need. In this way, you will sound more prepared.

Avoid salary topics. When you are asked how much money you would expect, it's not wise if you give no response. But it's not right to give an exact number at once. Try to be open to discussion, so you'd better say something like, "If this is the right job for me, I believe we can come to an agreement on salary."

Push for a face-to-face meeting. At the end of the interview, don't forget to sell yourself. You can say something like, "I am very interested in your company. If possible I'd be really happy to see some of your managers. I am free either Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning. Which would be better for you?"

Try to rearrange surprise interviews. If you receive an interview call without any expectation, you can politely ask them to arrange another time for the interview, so you can be better prepared. Try something like, "I am sorry but I can't do it right now. Can I call you back tomorrow after work, at 6p.m.?"

After the telephone interview, only a few are left for face-to-face interview, so get prepared and good luck!
